HOMEO-THERAPEUTIC CONSULTANT (HTC Correspondence Course)

Mentored by Wm. J. Cunningham - International Advanced Certified Trainer

The HTC course is presented as a 30-hour audio CD-ROM series. The course is a fascinating basic revelation of modern, complex homeopathy with classical singular homeopathy as a jumping off point into the quantum world of the art and practice of homeopathy. Homeopathy's 200 year history is reviewed and the specific people and places are revealed in regards to America's legalization of homeopathy at the turn of the last century. Included is a review of over 500 FDA registered homeopathic remedies the Professor Nelson created while in Denver, Colorado between 1982 and 1992.

Professor Nelson guides the sincere student through the course to the objective of Certified Homeo-Therapeutic Consultant. For more information, review: <http://www.whitedovehealing.com/homeopathy/index.html> or contact White Dove directly at (303) 828-4439. Counts as 30 CEU towards certification and/or recertification.

Mandatory Vaccinations - How Did We Get There From Here?

By Dr. Rima Laibow

As a physician, I assumed that vaccinations were as helpful and as necessary as I had been taught that they were. Careful examination of the evidence soon convinced me otherwise, however, and now I am personally an advocate of the "No Vaccination - Ever" school of public health opinion.

However, the Natural Solutions Foundation takes the position that each person or parent should be free to make their own well-informed decision on these issues but that compulsory vaccination should never, never be forced upon anyone.

I have practiced nutritional and natural psychiatry and medicine for my entire nearly 40 year career in medicine and I have labored long and hard to reverse and correct the multiple damages caused to huge numbers of people by vaccines. One area of grave distrust is the contents of vaccines.

FDA & FTC TARGET NATURAL PRODUCT COMPANIES

Companies barred from sharing customers' positive experience of their products

This past month, the FDA and FTC brought charges against 5 natural product companies, alleging that these companies have made improper claims about their natural dietary supplements. As most of you know, dietary supplement makers cannot legally claim that their products "cure" anything. The FDA and FTC give only drug companies permission to do that.

The twist in two of the cases is that the FDA and FTC are cracking down not just on claims, but also on the use of testimonials. These two "testimonial" cases involve Rhode Island company Daniel Chapter One and New Mexico-based Native Essence Herb Company. The FDA and FTC are seeking hefty fines and other sanctions in part because these companies posted letters from satisfied customers on their websites. None of the customers claim outright to have been cured by the products, although the customers did share their personal experience of medical conditions that objectively disappeared after use of the products. Are such testimonials medical claims? How far can a ban against testimonials go? Can the government ban consumers from sharing their personal health care experiences with one another in any forum?

Citizens For Health Chairman of the Board Jim Turner, who represents Daniel Chapter One, is concerned. The FTC and FDA attack against his client "fails to distinguish between cynical con men who intentionally cheat vulnerable people, and persons of conviction who work diligently to comply with the law in their effort to help people." <http://www.citizens.org/>

Editor's Note: As far as we know, currently there is no law against publishing a testimonial so long as it does not include libelous statements or incitements to criminal acts. It is not yet a crime to take supplements. Testimonials are technically a matter of personal opinion, not of proven fact.

There are three major problems with the nutrition business right now that the attorneys are addressing:

- 1. Codex Alimentarius labels all nutrients as toxins.*
- 2. Registered dieticians are on a big push to be the only licensed nutritionists in every state.*
- 3. The FDA, FTC and most state licensing boards are really opposed to MLM nutritional supplement marketing practices.*

Thanks for your continued support.
